UNIVERSITY LUNCH ORDER ENTERS THIRD DAY OF NEGOTIATIONS

Professors remain divided over spelling of word neither has spelled incorrectly.

By The Daily Quest International Desk — Beijing

What began as a simple lunch order at a Beijing university has developed into a departmental dispute involving three professors, the Dean, and a delivery driver who says he just wants to go home. Professor Su and Dr. Shi have been arguing over the spelling of sushi since Thursday.

Professor Su insists the word must begin with "Su."

Dr. Shi maintains that it must contain "Shi."

Both have submitted written arguments.

Both have spelled the word correctly.

A graduate student who pointed this out has been asked to leave the meeting.

The situation deteriorated Friday when Dr. Shi accused Professor Su of attempting to remove the final syllable.

"Without Shi, what have you got?" he demanded.

"Without Su, you haven't got anything to begin with!" Su replied.

The Dean entered the faculty lounge shortly after noon. He listened for approximately thirty seconds, looked at the lunch menu, and left without speaking.

A delivery driver arrived an hour later but was turned away because the professors objected to the font on his receipt.

"It's not even a scholarly font," Dr. Shi complained.

Dr. Zhou, who had originally suggested ordering lunch, proposed switching to sashimi.

That idea was abandoned when Dr. Sa from the Mathematics Department arrived and demanded to know why his name had been brought into the dispute.

At press time, Dr. Zhou had gone downstairs for a sandwich.

The others remain in negotiations.

TODAY'S WEATHER

FORECAST: A little of everything. Possibly not in that order.

WIND: Leaves are currently travelling without a destination.

OFFICIAL ADVICE: Check the sky before leaving. It has been known to change its mind.

THE DAILY ASSIGNMENT

OPERATION: CHANGE THE RULES

The Daily Quest Sports Desk has received encouraging reports that winning isn't always about getting the highest score.

Gather a friend or two and play a familiar game differently.

Try Bingo Bowling, invent a ridiculous scoring system for miniature golf, or create a challenge where the least talented participant has a genuine chance of winning.

You don't need to be particularly good.

You just need to play.

BONUS CREDIT: Retire undefeated after your first victory.

WALTER PRITCHARD WINS BOWLING TOURNAMENT WITHOUT KNOWING HOW TO BOWL

Local champion credits two gutter balls and a lucky single pin.

By The Daily Quest Sports Desk

Walter Pritchard, 47, has won the town's first Bingo Bowling Championship despite having never bowled a game in his life. Pritchard entered Saturday's competition after downloading a Bingo Bowling card from CoolSideQuests.com.

"I thought I'd try it," he said. "The shoes were included."

While experienced bowlers concentrated on strikes and spares, Pritchard spent much of the afternoon aiming at things most competitors were trying to avoid.

His first two gutter balls were greeted with considerable enthusiasm.

"I needed those," he explained.

During the fifth frame, he knocked down a single pin and celebrated as though he'd won the national championship.

Across the lane, tournament favourite Darren Mitchell was having an excellent game.

He finished with 218 points.

Pritchard finished with a completed bingo card.

"BINGO!" he shouted, waving the paper over his head.

Mitchell protested that the winner should, at the very least, know how to bowl.

The organizers checked the rules.

There was nothing about that.

Pritchard accepted his prize, purchased a hot dog, and announced his retirement from competitive bowling.

"I'd like to go out on top."

EDITH MERCER FIXES SQUEAKY GATE, NEIGHBOURHOOD LOSES TRACK OF TIME

Residents had grown accustomed to the familiar noise.

By The Daily Quest Neighbourhood Desk

Edith Mercer finally repaired the squeaky gate outside her house on Tuesday. It had been making the same noise for eleven years.

"I put some oil on the hinge," Edith said. "Took about thirty seconds."

The repair has not been universally welcomed.

For years, neighbours had relied on the gate's distinctive squeal to announce Edith's morning walk, the arrival of the postman, and her grandson's visits on Sunday afternoons.

"I used to hear that gate around eight and know I was running late," said neighbour Arthur Bell. "Now I have to look at the clock."

Edith has refused requests to remove the oil.

"It's my gate."

Arthur is considering purchasing a squeaky gate of his own.

PUBLIC NOTICE

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNITY IMPROVEMENT

The annual neighbourhood cleanup will take place next Saturday. Residents are encouraged to collect litter, tidy their gardens, and remove any objects that have been leaning against the garage since 2014.

Last year's cleanup uncovered three bicycles, a perfectly serviceable barbecue, and a man named Dennis who had been looking for his rake.

Dennis has since returned home.

The rake remains missing.
